

Dr. Linda Rudolph is co-director of the Public Health Institute's Center for Climate Change and Health, and serves as a consultant to local governments on health in all policies. She has previously worked as deputy director for Chronic Disease Prevention and Health Promotion in the California Department of Public Health (CDPH), and as health officer and public health director for the City of Berkeley. At CDPH Linda chaired the California Climate Action Team Public Health Work Group and the Strategic Growth Council's Health in all Policies Task Force. She is a board certified preventive medicine physician and has a master's in public health from UC Berkeley.